“I’ve been a member of the hacksoc committee for two years. It’s hard and challenging work. You’ll stay up into the wee hours of the night planning events, coordinating external visitors, and fighting with the university. You’ll have people criticising you for decisions you take, regardless of the outcome.

Yet, as an organiser for the university’s largest society you sit at the beginning of peoples’ professional lives and get to help them realise their dreams. You get the power to provide resources and build platforms for people to learn and explore far more than our university could ever provide. You have the opportunity to create real change in the university and in the industry as a whole.

Sitting on HackSoc’s committee has let me give back to the industry in an incredibly unique and special way.” - Harley
